CLIMATE ACTION

14-21 August 2007

Governments talk green in one corner and build more airports in another, while corporations cover up their toxic fumes with slick PR campaigns. Both are committed to endless economic growth, making the solutions they offer mere smokescreens for business as usual.

The Camp for Climate Action is a place for people who want to move beyond false solutions into creative and practical action. It's for those of us who want to learn to make our lives more sustainable. And it's for everyone who revels in the joy and power of collective action.

Last year's camp showed what's possible. A unique combination of festival and protest, over 100 hands-on workshops and working ecological village, all culminating in a day of mass direct action against Drax coal-fired power station. It inspired hundreds to go home and begin building a new radical movement to stop the root causes of climate change.

This summer be part of it! Get involved in one of the local groups springing up around the country, help organise this year's camp, and come along anytime from 14 to 21 August.
